

Synchronized statements are more efficient because they directly target the specific account that we want to lock. With the synchronized methods, we would lock the whole method to change one account so the other threads could not execute the methods unless the lock is gone. With synchronized statements, we can lock only one account while other threads can still use the methods to change other accounts.